THE HANGING BEES.

A CENTURY or so ago, the scaffold adorned every cross roads in merry England. It was extensively used to punish the petty sins of the poor. We have advanced so far in altruism, that the scaffold has been banished to the state prisons, where it is freely employed to punish the poor who commit murder.

At San Quentin two men have been hanged in the past few days. Nearly a dozen more await the noose in the death cells.

At Salem, five trembling wretches await Black Friday, December 13, when they will be dropped into eternityaccording to the verdiet recently rendered by the sovereign people of Oregon.

Superintendent Curtis of the Oregon prison who reently resigned rather than hang any more men, says:

"I will never 'pull the string' on another poor devil as long as I live; I don't believe in this proposition of hogtying a man and sending him over the river. To strap, blindfold and then slide a noose around a helpless guy's neck and deliberately kill him, after you have had every advantage in the world over him, is just a little too rough. Prisons have literally beheaded men, torn the head from the body; other victims have dangled by the neck an hour before pronounced dead. I will never have anything more to do with executions.'

At San Quentin the warden shifts his hangman's duty ento convicts. Three prisoners are blindfolded, led into three closets back of the scaffold, each given a sharp butcher knife, and at a signal, each strikes a short blow with the knife, severing a cord. One of the three strings cut—no one knows which—drops the helpless victim into eternity. Other convicts have prepared and tested the ropes and blindfolded, tied and placed the noose over the doomed man.

This system may ease the warden's conscience, but it is extremely unfair to the poor devils compelled to partieipate. They were not sent to the penitentiary for minor crimes to be made official murderers.

If executions decreased crime, there would be less outery against them. But they never did and never will. They did not decrease petty crime in England and they are not decreasing capital crime in America. Statistics show an alarming increase in homicides generally in spite of the numerous hanging bees.

Slack punishment, the trivial technicalities, the law's needless delay, are far more to blame than any other cause. Speedy punishment is usually reserved for the short and

A sample of the law's delay is furnished in Texas, where Burrell Oates, eight years after his crime, after seven trials, is still awaiting the hangman. All of the reversals were secured on quibbles-none affected the merits of the case.

But even prompt punishment, which attacks the result, will not stop the crime. The cause is left alone—and the cause is usually attributable to social conditions which would be largely corrected by the application of the principles of Eugenies.

OFFICIALS-ELECT

County Judge-Elect F. L. Tou Velle and Commissioner-Elect W. C. Leever left Saturday morning for Ashland where they will meet the voters of each road district to levy a special tax for road building purposes. The two officials-elect made the trip in Road District No. 1 embraces the southeast corner of the county and a portion of Ashland east of the creek. In it is situated the Green Spring mountain road as well as the road to Dead Indian, which Ashland has long wanted to improve. The assessment of the district is almost ideal for the levying of a special tax. It is assessed as follows:

Lands held by non-resi-$2,000,000 Property held by corporations, such as railroads, telephones, etc., as assessed by the state tax 1,530,000 commissions .. Lands and other property held by people living in the district 600,000

Total assessment of district $4,130,000 People living in the district would pay about one-seventh of the assessment, non-resident, land speculators and corporations, the other six sevenths. Thus the cost is nearly all borne by non-residents, while the residents, who are the principal beneficiaries, pay but little. The officials-elect also plan to visit other districts hoping to interest them in the matter.

The Last Night.

Weitten by a Tramp in Reno, in August, 1911.

Night falls, and with each lingering, lottering ray Of daythus's radiance left, the man whose doon His peers have fixed for him looks dimly out Through bars of steel upon a lasting world. With mind a blank and soul confusion-tossed, He feels, as never else, his helplessness-Feels with his dulled, enfeebled sense The last hours of a world from which he's spurned. Tomorrow's dawn, too swift to come, brings on The dead march to the shabby builded thing. Man-schemed, man-wrought - the engine of his death The gallows, rudely reared beyond those bars, From whose unhallowed arm he soon shall hang Shall bang' Oh, ignomious exit from The stage on which he's played his wretched part, And which, now cleared for him, shall be the scene Of actions like to his, but with the parts Performed by other actors, earth's great scheme Allowing one great climax to a man. A murderer! God knows he was. And yet, The love of life within himself is not An easy thing to cast aside—the hope Of Heavenly pardon, so remote in this Dark hour, a last and feebly made attempt To gain a sanctuary, and to save From man's damnation an immortal soul, Throws the unfortunate with tremulous plea, Upon his bended knees, and 'mid the dark Of his last living night he pours his woes Into the ears of One, invisible But who has even been a gleaming light Amid the deepest earthly gloom, and prays His Savior to receive his sinning self. Who knows what joy, what peace, what saving hope May now be his who in the morn shall die By human agency upon a tree, When in his last hours' vigit he shall see, Perhaps through penitetial tears, the words Of Christ, accused of crime, hanged-crucified: "Come unto Me, ye weary, heavy laden; Come unto Me, and I will give you rest."

She makes it best who, looking after the culinary department, turns her back resolutely upon unhealthful, or even suspicious, food accessories. She is economical; she knows that true economy does not consist in the use of inferior meat, flour, or baking powder. She is an earnest advocate of home made, home baked food, and has proved the truth of the statements of the experts that the best cooking in the world today is done with Royal Baking Powder.
